

Address to homo stultus

a declaration of stupidity for inspection by the wise

Fellow fools and incompetents. We have someone before us who claims that our folly will result in our own death, not only for himself, but the whole of humanity, and all species on our Earth. He is clearly very much more stupid and incompetent than average.

He claims that the increase of carbon dioxide in our atmosphere will result in the end of our civilisation, and that there are no means to stop it.

Let us refute this claim.

Let us ask our wise fools and incompetents at our fascist universities their opinion on the matter. 100,000 will say one thing, but because of variation in the species homo stultus, some will be even more deranged than we are. Three will disagree. Let us pick the opinion of the three who disagree as an alternative opinion, as indeed it is, which corresponds with our own. We will then promote this opinion.

We have about our person something called money. It is the principal carrier of our intelligence. It circulates through handbags and trouser pockets between us. We will use money to promote the idea that there is nothing we need do about the matter. Then the general population of homo stultus, who think even less than we do, will agree with us.

We will have completely solved the problem and achieved our aim. Stupidity will have triumphed.

Further, the principle can be applied elsewhere, as it already has. This guiding principle will be used as we ascend from our Earth and conquer the galaxy, and possibly the universe itself. The whole system of galactic civilisation will become dominated by stupidity, and we will be the main, indeed the only, reason for it. What a wonderful idea!

Let us prepare for our death. We have before us not only our collective delusions based on the dismissal of fact. We have our uncontrollable and dangerous violence.

Long used to the domination and eating of other species, and even their wonton killing for enjoyment, we have been able to extinguish many of them. It is natural for us to follow the extinction of the dodo and continue the ascent with the extinction of ourselves.

Our deep interest in violence has led to the intense development of weapons that led to the destruction of the cities of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Since that time, our civilisation has developed so that we can achieve planetary extinction by a wide variety of means.

The amazing thing was that, despite our development of many forms of killing, arising from our stupidity we did not realise that we could achieve our aim more simply, indeed without resort to any of these means at all.

The climate catastrophe we have designed for ourselves by the emission of pollutant CO₂ from our advanced technologies, and which our idiots have informed us causes global warming, presents us with an ideal opportunity, indeed a necessity which it is impossible to avoid. There are many means by which our own death can be achieved, and their considerable variety allows us the luxury to think of the way we can employ them, and even their use in combination.

These twin principles of delusional stupidity and wonton uncontrollable violence can be combined to complete our own extinction and that of the planet. But our stupidity has allowed us to omit that we have only allowed us to do this to our own planet. It could be applied with considerable and even vast success elsewhere.
